

Application for Registration in Queensland of an Interstate Domestic Violence Order

Administration purposes only

Court file number:

Police Domestic Violence Index number:

In the Magistrates Court at:

Registration of an interstate domestic violence order.

A domestic violence order that is made in any other state or territory or New Zealand may be registered in Queensland. If the order is registered in Queensland it has the same effect as a protection order made under the Domestic and Family Violence Protection Act 1989, and may be enforced against a person as if it were a protection order that had been made under the Act and personally served on the person.

The applicant need not notify the person against whom the order was made of the registration of the order in Queensland.

A registered interstate order can also be changed or cancelled once it is registered in Queensland. To change or cancel a registered interstate order you must fill in Form DV5 Application to Revoke or Vary a Domestic Violence Order.

Relationship of the aggrieved to the respondent

11. What is the relationship of the person for whose benefit the order was made (the aggrieved) to the person against whom the order was made (the respondent)? Specify whether it is a spousal relationship, intimate personal relationship, family relationship, an informal care relationship or other type of relationship.

Spousal relationship

A spousal relationship includes those people who are or have been married, people who are the biological parents of a child, or people who are or have resided together as a couple. A spousal relationship includes relationships between people of the same or opposite sex.

Married	<input type="checkbox"/>	Reside together as a couple	<input type="checkbox"/>
Married/Separated	<input type="checkbox"/>	Have resided together as a couple	<input type="checkbox"/>
Divorced	<input type="checkbox"/>	Biological parents of a child of the relationship	<input type="checkbox"/>

Intimate personal relationship

An intimate personal relationship includes those people who are or were engaged to be married to each other including a betrothal under cultural or religious tradition. It also includes people who are or were previously dating and whose lives have become enmeshed. The circumstances of the relationship including, for example, trust and commitment; the length of time the relationship has existed or did exist; the frequency of contact between the persons; and the level of intimacy between the persons will be considered to decide whether an intimate personal relationship exists. The relationship does not have to be of a sexual nature. It includes relationships between people of the same and opposite sex.

Engaged/or were engaged	<input type="checkbox"/>	Dating/or have dated	<input type="checkbox"/>
Betrothed/or were betrothed	<input type="checkbox"/>

Family relationship

A family relationship includes those people who are relatives by blood or marriage. This includes someone who it is reasonable to regard as a relative. This is considering that for some people the concept of a relative may be wider, such as for Aboriginal people, Torres Strait Islanders, members of certain non-English-speaking background communities and people with particular religious beliefs. Relatives of people in defacto relationships are included. Children under 18 years of age cannot be named as a respondent or aggrieved under a family relationship.

Relation to respondent (for example sibling, grandparent, aunt, nephew, adult child 18 years and over, stepchild, parent, cousin)

Informal care relationship

An informal care relationship is one where a person is or was dependent on another person (a carer) who helps the person in an activity of daily living. This may include dressing, preparing meals or shopping. The personal care must be required because of a disability, illness or impairment. The help must also be provided in an informal way and not involve the payment of a fee or care provided as part of an arrangement (for example in-home care nurses or Meals on Wheels). A fee does not include a pension or allowance in the carer's own name from the Commonwealth Government.
