

Disability Services Output and Output Measures List Version 4.1

Disability Services funds non-government organisations (FNGOs) to deliver services on an output basis.

An output is a good or a service delivered to someone else which generates a desired outcome. FNGOs transform resources (inputs) into services (outputs) and the impact of these outputs on individuals, groups and the community are the outcomes of the service.

Guidelines for quantifying outputs

Output Measures

1. Place

A Place for Disability Services means the capacity to provide a disability service (as defined by the output descriptor) to one service user at a time. This measure is generally used for quantifying accommodation support services.

For example, where accommodation support is provided to three people living in a group home, the output would be three places.

2. Hour

An Hour is 60 minutes of direct support to a person – this may be an accumulation of smaller blocks of support to total one full hour of direct support. The majority of outputs are measured in hours.

When an output is measured as an hour, it refers to the direct hours of support that would be provided to a service user/s. When determining the quantity of direct support hours, FNGOs should describe output hours as an annual amount. Therefore if a service provides five hours of community access per week for 40 weeks of the year, the total annual output is 200 hours.

Consistent with the Disability Services National Minimum Data Set, a 'direct hour of support' is the actual support received by a service user. This may be time spent in direct 'face to face' service delivery, or time spent working on behalf of a service user. It does not include administration, transport or other similar hours that the service user directly or indirectly benefits from. The information provides details about the types of activities that are included as direct support and those that are not.

Activities included in Direct Support- Time spent with the service user

- Face to face time spent providing a specific service (individually or as a member of a group)
- Sleep over duties
- Ongoing service user monitoring, evaluation and assessment directly related to the service being provided
- Planning supports and services with the service user

Direct hours of support are not apportioned between the service users the hours of service provided in a group setting for each service user should be recorded. For example, if three people are supported together in a community access service for one hour, the output is represented as three hours.

Activities included in Direct Support- Time spent on behalf of the service user

- Case conferencing directly related to an individual service user which includes contact with other essential stakeholders such as a family meeting or interagency meeting
- Activities undertaken on behalf of a service user including planning supports and services and case management coordination
- Telephone calls made on behalf of a service user
- Documentation of service user notes

Indirect hours of support are apportioned between the service users when activities are related to a number of service users. For example, attending a one hour planning meeting relating two service users, the output is recorded as half an hour per person.

Activities NOT included in Direct Support

- Administration and management
- Business planning
- Corporate Meetings
- Staff training
- Community consultation

- Preparation time
- Travel to and from client
- Record keeping not directly related to an individual service user
- Client referrals
- Interagency meetings not directly related to an individual service user
- Team meetings

3. Service Report

Where the quantity of the output cannot be readily represented in places or in hours of direct support to a service user a Service Report will be required. For example, information and referral services, alternative formats of communication and training and development. A Service Report provides quantitative and qualitative information about the outputs provided.

The quantitative component of a service report may include information such as the number of instances of support provided, the number of service users assisted, the number of training sessions or events held or the opening hours for the service. The qualitative component will provide the interpretation of any data collected, including for example how the outputs were provided, what was achieved, were there any problems and are there any improvements planned.

The type of information included in a service report would be tailored to the specific service. Not all types of information would be suitable for all service types. Some information may be unique to a particular service. The content of a service report will be discussed and agreed with the FNGO.
